CLAIMANT FOR CARNEGIE MEDAL

Del Rio Negro Rescues Two Mexican Women From Well.

Del Rio, Tex., June 2.—Del Rio has a candidate for a Carnegie hero medal in the person of an old negro.

Two Mexican laborers who were deepening a well pit used dynamite to break up some of the hard earth encountered and the action of the explosive created a quantity of deadly gas in the well. The Mexican who was at work in the pit was overcome by the gas. An old negro and the other Mexican were at work above. The negro lowered the Mexican into the well and gave him extra rope to tie to the unconscious companion. The man became confused and tied the rope which had lowered him into the pit about the other's body and at once collapsed.

With the help of two Mexican women the negro pulled the unconscious man to the top and immediately volunteered to go below for the other unfortunate. He was lowered a short distance and became choked and had to be brought to the top. A flame was then lowered into the pit in an attempt to create a draught and the negro insisted on going down again. He was once more lowered into the pit and withstood the gas long enough to get his companion to the surface.

Artificial respiration was practiced on the Mexican for a considerable time before the chances for his living were favorable. All three men are now out of danger, due to the heroism of the aged negro.
